Application Tips

The biggest mistake a contestant can make, is believing that the competition begins when she arrives at the pageant. The competition begins when a contestant submits her application and other information to the queen advisors. These documents create the all important first impression. Long before you meet the queen advisors or judges they will see your application and begin to associate it with you. For the judges the application can be a very important decision making factor. An application can many times be the difference between winning and losing the competition.

APPLICATION GUIDELINES:

The application and other documents must be neatly TYPED. Never submit an untyped document.

When you first receive your application, make several copies so that you can “tune up” what you say before typing on the final draft. ALWAYS submit the original and not a copy. Making these copies to experiment with will prevent you from submitting a messy application full of white out.

Have someone else proof read your errors. It is easy to skip things when it’s your own.

Make sure that you tell the truth fully on your application. Often at times judges will ask very detailed questions about your application. They will know if you are lying.

Make a copy of your final application so that you can study it and be prepared for things that the judges might ask you.

When stating facts and background, do not use informal or cute language. This is a job application and should be written as such.

Do not use nicknames.

State your accomplishments in the appropriate space, but do not brag or add everything since grammar school. The important things include: leadership, speaking, scholastic, horse show and rodeo awards.

Keep your answers as short as possible. If it is too long the judge will not read it. When they look at your application from a glance you want the major details to jump out at them. If your answers are too lengthy they will skim right over the important details.

Use the appropriate space the application allows when answering your questions. Do not use extra paper to finish your comments. All information should go in the appropriate space.

Remember; a neatly filled out application with impressive grammar, goals and achievements will put you one step further toward your goal of earning the queen title you seek.

Social Media plays a big part in today’s society. Please keep in mind, employers, judges and the public will look at these as ways to get to “know” who you are.
